Blue Grass is just one of many light installations by artist Vibhor Sogani. It re-imagines simple forms of nature and creates a phenomenal experience.

Blue Grass is inspired by soft and swaying tall grass. It is representative of elements that complement natural formations, like a group of wavy strands of stainless steel. It appears as a simple design which appears to dance and interact within themselves forming a distinct cluster which towers the landscape.

Each of the strands appears to impart celebratory emotions. They gently curve in a symphonic asymmetry. Each strand has been crafted by reducing the diameter of each segment traversing from the bottom to the top. This has created nodes with gaps that have a blue light placed inside. The light fixture in the node of the lower segment throws a gentle wash on the stainless steel segment placed above it.

It defies the scale and proportions of its inspiration to create an original lasting impression. At night the installation comes alive with a dynamic glow revealing an impactful form. In the day, the stainless steel subtly resonates within the surrounding imagery to reflect the myriad of moods of the environment.
